The Agile Alliance, a non-profit organization dedicated to supporting the advancement of Agile software development principles and practices announced that speaker submissions for Agile2013 close this Friday, February . With four days remaining, Agile2013 organizers encourage software professionals to submit session proposals that fit with this year's theme of – Practitioners Making Agile Work at <http://agile2013.agilealliance.org/speakers/>.

The Agile2013 conference will be held Aug. 5-9, 2013 in Nashville, Tenn. This year's conference celebrates “Getting Agile Done,” and the committed practitioners that have led the industry to build better software faster. It offers the greatest breadth of learning and content of any industry event, and this year's program will focus on sharing experiences, ideas and creativity for “doing” Agile in useful and meaningful ways. Agile2013 is where software practitioners learn from those who have achieved success with Agile and share their own experiences getting things completed with Agile.
