With its Jazz project in particular, IBM is pushing for greater acceptance of the faster-paced, collaborative development process, which it sees as the future of development

About 25 percent of software development projects within IBM are now employing some manner of "agile" methodology, a company official said Monday.

"This is not a fashion trend," said Sue McKinney, vice president of strategy, integration, and development transformation, IBM Software Group. "We believe this is going to be the way we develop software." Read more on
